A floor plan diagram of a room. At the top, there is an 'Entry' area with a curved wall. To the left of the entry is a staircase labeled 'Dn' (Down). The main area of the room is labeled 'Open To Below'. This area is defined by a horizontal line (likely a balcony or mezzanine) and a vertical line (likely a wall or partition). The space below this horizontal line is open, as indicated by the text and the diagonal lines connecting the corners of the room to the corners of the open area. The room is bounded by thick walls on the left and right sides, and a thick base at the bottom.

This is a black and white floor plan diagram. It shows a rectangular room with a large central area labeled "Open To Below". This area is defined by four diagonal lines connecting the corners of a smaller rectangle within the room. To the left of this central area is a staircase, indicated by a series of parallel lines, with the label "Dn" (down) next to it. On the right side of the room, there is an "Entry" point with a curved line representing a door or threshold. The room is bounded by thick black lines representing walls. There are three thick black rectangular shapes: one on the right wall, one at the bottom-left corner, and one at the bottom-right corner. The overall layout suggests a multi-level space where the main room opens up to a lower level.
